(Channeling begins)

Djwhal Khul here. Tashi Delek.

Alright. This week's topic is the Bardo. Bardo is what we refer to as a process of transitioning from life to after life and in the Tibetan Book of the Dead you can read much more about it if you want to delve into it a bit more deeply.

But this is a time when many are making their transitions or maybe a loved one has recently crossed over. Also a lot of animals leaving at this time. So the Bardo process in the Tibetan way, and it differs from cultures of course, is that when the person takes their last breath, a ceremony begins on a different level. The astrology chart of the time of death is taken, just like you would do it at the time of birth. Things are studied. A ceremony is performed on the body, specifically, a kind of energetic opening of the fontanel to finish pulling the spirit out of the body completely.

Then three days later it is considered safe to do something else with the body because all of the consciousness has left.

In a shorter kind of more New Age version of it, there are three cords in your consciousness that run from the soul to the physical life form. You can pull up a chord or two and have a near death experience and come back; all three cords is a permanent disconnection.

We're of course waiting for the third one before doing anything traumatic to the body, like an autopsy or embalming, etc. or incineration so that there is no trauma that you carry over, because you still have a sentient body, an etheric sentient body. So in a more New Age way of explaining, essentially when one leaves the body, one meets with many others, some that have already crossed over, some loved ones, spiritual teachers, angels that help with that process, several guides.

We talk about your life, all the goals you set for yourself and all the ones you met and if there was one you didn't meet, we have that three day window to complete it. If you were seeking enlightenment you've got the three day window to complete. If you held a grudge until that last breath, you have a chance to release it and make amends on the other side.

Then there is a choice: stick around basically, support the others from the other side, or you can re-incarnate into the same family or try a different, different soul pod basically somewhere else. You can take on other tasks on the inner planes: be a teacher, be a healer, be a guide. And then there are other paths away from the earth entirely that take you more into the cosmos so you're really not lingering here.

What is the popular choice now, because there is sort of a natural thinning of the population going on, and some by unnatural means I might add, but basically the population will change. And many are wanting to stick around and do environmental work from the other side or guide their loved ones from the other side. Even some of the pets will stick around in their energy body and still run around the house and what not.

So because the psychic tendencies in both the animal and human kingdom are naturally growing stronger, there is much more awareness of these visits and that is the other reason why some are choosing to stay. They are not earth bound, their spirit is free. They're still growing, they're still gaining enlightenment and then they just get to be helpers on the other side. So that is the Bardo in a nutshell.

Alright. As always, thank you and my love to you,

Djwhal Khul
